Introduction

The first regulatory body for education in the North-West Territories was the Board of Education which was legislated into being by the "School Ordinance of 1884". In 1901 the Board of Education became a territorial government department. In the first two decades following the grant of provincial status to Saskatchewan, the number of schools increased rapidly and the Department of Education found it difficult to monitor the system and maintain standards. However, the drought and depression of the 1930's created a climate conducive to consolidation and standardization in the following decades.

This collection is composed of mimeographed material regarding school curricula between 1949 and 1972.

The material in this collection has been assigned Accession No. R77-227.

Introduction

The Innovative Projects Plan was established by the Department of Education in January 1972. The intent of the programme was to promote new ideas, plans and practices in the areas of curriculum, teaching and organizational structure in school systems.

The Plan was administered by the Research and Evaluation Branch of the Department. Project proposals were approved by the local Board of Education, then passed to the Provincial Selection Committee. Originally, provincial innovative grants up to a maximum of $5,000 per project were available. In March 1974, the programme was expanded to include smaller regional grants to a maximum of $500 per project. Seven Regional Selection Committees were also established to adjudicate proposals. The Provincial Committee then made final recommendations for funding to the Minister. In April 1976, provincial projects were discontinued although projects were still funded at the regional level. During the operation of the Plan, the maximum amount of funds made available for innovative projects ranged from $50,000 to $100,000 per year.

In its administration of the programme, the Research and Evaluation Branch processed and reviewed applications, maintained an inventory of projects, followed-up on final reports and distributed copies of these reports to interested groups.

Among the areas examined and explored through innovative projects were creative approaches to curriculum development, the expansion of rural education programmes, physical education, music, fine arts, special education for disabled and gifted students, kindergarten programmes, library resource development, career development, computer programmes, and science laboratory projects. Agricultural and environmental studies, resource handbooks, writing workshops and multi-media kits were the focus of other projects. Teacher-student, parent-teacher, and school-community relationships were also critically examined in the course of these studies.

The records in this accession include the administrative records of the Plan and individual innovative project files. These files contain proposals, applications, adjudicator's reports and preliminary and/or final reports of the project. Arrangement follows the original numerical filing system of the branch programme. Also included are requests for resubmissions and unsuccessful proposals. A catalogue of innovative projects funded between 1972 and 1978 summarizing each project may be found at the beginning of the individual projects section.

These records were accessioned as R88-91.

Introduction

In response to a complaint received by the Department of Education from a group of ratepayers of the St. Paul's Roman Catholic Separate School District No. 20, a Committee of Inquiry was appointed on October 27, 1965. This committee was to inquire into and report on instruction in languages other than English, especially French, in the province.

The first meeting of the committee was held on September 17, 1965, in Regina. It was decided that after conducting its own research, the committee would invite interested parties to submit briefs. Written briefs were accepted until March 31, 1966 (with some extensions). A number of these briefs were selected and those responsible invited to appear before the Committee in Regina or Saskatoon.

The file consists of three document boxes previously held by the Department of Education. This includes material relating to the setting up and initial research of the committee, a complete set of copies of the briefs presented in both centres, and correspondence relating to the committee and its work.

Introduction

The first regulatory body for education in the North-West Territories was the Board of Education which was legislated into being by the "School Ordinance of 1884". In 1901 the Board of Education became a territorial government department. In the first two decades following the grant of provincial status to Saskatchewan, the number of schools increased rapidly and the Department of Education found it difficult to monitor the system and maintain standards. However, the drought and depression of the 1930's created a climate conducive to consolidation and standardization in the following decades.

Responsibility for school curricula development originated with the Director of Curricula and Correspondence Instruction (later Director of Curricula) during the 1930s to 1950s. During the 1960s and 1970s program and course development for elementary and high schools was a function of the Curriculum Development Branch (variously the School Programs and Curricular Services Branch; Program Development and Curricular Services Branch; Program Development-General Education Branch; and Program Development Unit of the Development Division). Areas within the branch focused on school curriculum, libraries, music, visual education, broadcasts, driver training and physical education. Supervisors and later, associate directors headed each section while consultants provided services in more general areas of development.

The 1960s marked a decade of assessment, experimentation and implementation in program and course development. A plan for the reorganization of the school system into divisional levels of learning (Divisions I-IV) was completed and gradually phased in beginning in 1964. Review and evaluation of textbooks, teaching methods, guides and teaching materials took place through committees, conventions and meetings. While direction came from the Curriculum Development/Program Development Branch, planning and discussion through the committees involved membership from teachers colleges, superintendency staff, university, elementary and high school teachers in the system, and members of the Teachers Federation working with departmental staff. In particular, close liaison with the Teachers' Federation Curriculum Committee, and the General Advisory Committee developed in this period.

Emphasis in specific subject-matter curriculum committees was directed towards the local situation and the improvement of curriculum in the northern areas. The diversification of courses in high school maths and sciences and the introduction of more French language courses were emphasized in the 1960s. The implementation of new courses and programs occurred through Branch liaison with trustees, teachers and parents in the form of teacher workshops, meetings, and a bimonthly newsletter.

A report on the divisional level organization in elementary schools was released in April 1969. It concluded that the concept had received general acceptance by teachers, pupils, parents and school boards, but recommended continued program and course improvement. The reorganization of the Department of Education in 1969-70 resulted in the Program Development-General Education Branch functioning with four units: Curriculum Development-Social Sciences and Humanities; Curriculum Development - Mathematics and Sciences; Student Evaluation; and Instructional Resources.

During the 1970s the Branch continued to identify and define educational goals and prepare and implement new programs. Courses of study and curriculum guides were revised and new audio-visual and radio/television programs for schools were introduced. The Branch also provided consultative services to individual schools and emphasized teacher education through workshops and seminars in the implementation of new programs. Areas of particular consideration in program development included native education, music, drivers' education, metrication, technical education and special education.

This accession contains administrative records, studies and correspondence on course curriculum development in elementary and high schools. The records cover the 1960-1980 period, although some earlier material is included in the files. The collection consists of enrolment studies and population projections; reports of curriculum committees for areas including agricultural technology, biology, languages, early childhood readiness, environmental education, special education and student evaluation; promotional material for special events in schools; and correspondence with educational associations and other government departments. Also included are records relating to the selection of course textbooks; and subject files in program development.

This accession was organized according to coloured file tabs and related subject arrangement of the files. Files with original file numbers were placed at the beginning of the collection. The majority of the records are listed alphabetically by subject. Sectional headings were assigned by the archivist organizing the collection.

These records are subject to access restrictions. Researchers interested in consulting restricted material must apply to the Provincial Archivist who will, if necessary, consult with the responsible department regarding terms of access. The researcher should be aware that some delay may result before a decision on access is made.

These records were accessioned as R87-361.

SASKATCHEWAN. DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.
Supervisory Services Branch.

R-1624

The Department of Education (1905-1993, 1995-2002) was responsible for elementary, secondary, and post-secondary education in Saskatchewan. The department's responsibilities included developing and revising the curriculum used in Saskatchewan schools; issuing teachers' certificates; administering grants to school divisions and post-secondary institutions; setting departmental examinations at the Grade 12 level; providing special education services; and providing consultative, administrative, program, and supervisory support and services to various school jurisdictions.

In 1970, three branches of the department (Superintendence, Teacher Training, and Guidance and Special Education) were amalgamated into the newly established Supervisory Services Branch. The position of Superintendent of High Schools was reorganized into Regional Superintendent of Education. The regional superintendents were responsible for all aspects of education within their respective region. They coordinated the work of district superintendents; acted as a liaison to the department; and provided consultative services to trustees and teachers in the areas of finance, facilities and programs. In 1970, there were six regional offices. An office in Weyburn was established around 1973. In 1976, the Supervisory Services Branch was amalgamated with the Educational Administration Branch into the Regional Services Division.

This collection consists of records created, accumulated and used from 1961 to 1980 by the regional and assistant superintendent of education in the Weyburn regional office. The records were created under both the Supervisory Services Branch and Regional Services Division of the Department of Education. SASKATCHEWAN. DEPARTMENT OF ADVANCED EDUCATION AND MANPOWER.
DEPUTY MINISTER

Saskatchewan Archives Board, Regina

RESTRICTED ACCESS

Introduction

The Department of Continuing Education was established in 1972. The department operated until April 1, 1983, when the Department of Advanced Education and Manpower replaced it. On April 1, 1987 the Department of Advanced Education and Manpower ceased to exist. Its functions and responsibilities were transferred to the Department of Education.

The Department of Advanced Education and Manpower was responsible for adult education and training in Saskatchewan. The department's mandate was to establish, supervise and administer institutes to provide Saskatchewan residents with educational and training opportunities, courses of study and instruction for various trades and occupations. Programs and services were offered through community colleges, technical institutes, private vocational schools and universities. The department also created and administered manpower programs and services designed to provide adequate employment opportunities for Saskatchewan residents. Departmental programs focused on skills training, job placement, and employment guidance and counselling.

The Department of Advanced Education and Manpower originally consisted of four divisions: Administration and Financial Services, Advanced Education, Manpower, and Planning and Evaluation. During the 1984-85 fiscal year, the Northern Division and Human Resources Division were created. In December 1985 the Manpower Division was transferred to the Employment Development Agency.

During the period covered by the records (1982-1985) the Department worked to fulfil its mandate. Increased funding for post-secondary education was secured. Additional programs were offered at technical institutes and in 1986 the Northern Institute of Technology in Prince Albert was opened. A new Geological Sciences Building at the University of Saskatchewan was also opened in 1986. Student employment increased through the department's administration of the Opportunities Program, which provided subsidies to employers who hired students. Increased enrolments occurred. The department completed a comprehensive review of the Apprenticeship and Trade Certification legislation and planned major revisions to update trades training. Many of the department's programs focused on providing expanded employment opportunities to women.

The following collection contains the administrative records of the Deputy Minister of Advanced Education and Manpower.

The Deputy Ministers of Advanced Education and Manpower were William Gilbert Johnson (May 18, 1983-February 18, 1984), John C. Law (February 18, 1984-December 1, 1985), and Lawrie McFarlane (December 1, 1985-April 1, 1987).

The records were arranged in accordance with a classification system provided by the department. The record's creator provided all file titles.

These records are subject to access restrictions. Researchers interested in consulting restricted material must apply to the Provincial Archivist, who will if necessary consult with the responsible department regarding terms of access.
